Following a year in US politics that some have described as complicated and others as bizarre, the 2016 general election is in the books. Professor Michael Hawes will evaluate the outcome of the election and attempt to provide some insight into what this all means for America, for Canada, and for the World

Dr. Michael Hawes is Chief Executive Officer of the Foundation for Educational Exchange between Canada and the United States of America and Executive Director of Fulbright Canada. Since 1985, he has been a professor of international relations (currently on leave) in the Department of Political Studies at Queen's University in Kingston. He has also held academic posts at the University of California at Berkeley, the University of Southern California, and in Mexico, Sweden and Japan. Michael holds a Ph.D. in political science from York University in Toronto, an M.I.A. in international affairs from the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs at Carleton University, and a B.A.H in economics and history from the University of Toronto. He has published widely on foreign policy, political culture, international economic relations, regional integration, and related subjects. His most recent book, with Christopher Kirkey, is Canada in a Unipolar World (Oxford University Press, October 2016).

Michael's duties require that he spends half his time all over the United States. As a Canadian scholar familiar with the pulse of the United States he has a unique vantage point from which to help us understand the outcome of the American elections and its consequences for Canada and the rest of the world.
